October is Fire Prevention Month

Fire Prevention Week is the perfect time to reinforce two habits that genuinely prevent emergencies: Testing smoke alarms and handling lithium-ion batteries safely. A working smoke alarm is still the fastest way to detect a fire in its early stages, and pressing that test button once a month ensures the device is ready when you need it. Lithium-ion batteries, which power everything from tools to phones, deserve careful handling too. Using only approved chargers, avoiding overcharging, and keeping charging devices away from combustible materials reduces the risk of overheating or ignition. Small, consistent actions like these make a real difference in keeping your home and family safe.
